

Our Team Approach to Cancer Care

At Rocky Mountain Cancer Centers, we know cancer treatment can be complex and requires many different specialists. We also know your cancer journey is about more than just medical treatment. That's why we take a multidisciplinary approach to cancer care, making sure we deliver effective treatment options while providing the support you need.

What Is Multidisciplinary Care?

A multidisciplinary approach means that doctors from a variety of specialties work together to develop and monitor your treatment. Your care team also includes nonclinical professionals who support you physically, mentally, and emotionally, as well as assist you with practical needs.

Your multidisciplinary team includes:

Medical oncologists and surgeons who specialize in your specific type of cancer

Radiation oncologists

Triage nurses, who work closely with medical oncologists and help you communicate with your doctors during treatment

Infusion nurses, who are with you in the infusion room and support you during chemotherapy

Radiation technicians

Social workers, who help support mental and emotional health

Financial counselors

Schedulers

What Are the Benefits of Multidisciplinary Care?

Studies have shown that patients who have comprehensive, team-based care experience better outcomes.

Having all of your providers in one place, communicating directly with each other, saves time and leads to more effective treatment.

You can often meet with everyone on the team in one visit.
